Today's scenario is very different from the one we grew up in. There are unpredictable struggles but on the other hand, there is an openness and acceptance in the society, which was literally nonexistent during our growing years. This I feel, creates a nurturing environment to allow our children become better individuals as well as achieve more success in their professional and personal life. Today, parents are getting more and more involved in all the aspects of the life of their child. Here we must always remember, right from the beginning, to let the child try out all academic and co-curricular areas of education like art, music, sport etc. This will give them the opportunity to indulge/select any one particular skill of interest or maybe multiple, and work towards perfection in the same. We can encourage them to stay focused if the skill set is in sync with the child's aptitude.

Anything we enjoy working at and are inclined towards, will always be more creatively challenging and keep our interest going towards excellence. There is a quote which is attributed to Albert Einstein which so aptly reiterates my point of view -

"Everybody is a genius, but if you judge a fish by its ability to climb a tree, it will live its whole life believing that it's stupid"

It is us humans only, in the whole animal kingdom, who inappropriately judge another human being by focusing on a skill which they actually might not possess. We force our children into the "top professions" (according to society) such as engineers, doctors. The results we see are a high rate of dropouts and sometimes have even more serious consequences in the youth. This is all due to the stress level created by parents.

I am in no way judging or trying to put down all the efforts the parents put in. After all, they do want the best for the child. This is an established fact and universal truth but the way we go about showing/leading our children towards a success (again according to parents) is where we parents miserably fail.

The millennial children need only guidance and exposure to all possibilities that they can delve into and freedom to explore themselves with which ever field they wish to choose. Let them make their own mistakes. There is a lesson learnt from every aspect of life. Any kind of pressure created always has an opposite and negative reaction. I share these thoughts, as a learnt lesson so that you all allow your little ones, to have a stressfree childhood along with carefree teenage years.

We must ensure that we teach 'right from wrong' but this should not be confused with the career path they wish to opt for.

This will allow them to grow into confident and self sufficient adults and responsible citizens.

MY LITTLE BROTHER

The happiness and excitement of having a younger brother is that you can play with him. Though I stay busy with my school and studies still I find time in between to play with him. He plays with small toys and I like to help him out by settling up the toys when he throws them around in different directions. The ringing of a bell attracted him as a baby and then he started to sit and crawl. I had to watch him carefully that he doesn't fall and get hurt. When I play with him, he laughs and enjoys it. I love my little brother very much. I shall always take care of him and we will remain together.

SELF-BELIEF IS POWERFUL

Once upon a time, there lived a King who was clever and wise. He had three sons. The elder two sons were strong and learned horsemanship, sword fighting, archery, etc. But the younger son was physically weak but intelligent. He learnt to perform magic. The elder brothers made fun of him by saying that "You are not strong, your magic trick is nothing". But the younger son thought - one day my magic will be strong enough to defeat anybody. As they grew older, the elder two sons turned into being bad and punished people for disobeying their orders. But the younger son grew into being good and helped people.

One night there was an attack by a super evil Giant; the elder sons fought the Giant but were defeated. The younger son told his father that he shall fight against the Giant and the king agreed. The younger son and Giant fought till the morning. And the younger son killed him with his powerful magic spells. The king was very happy and crowned him as the King.

PRODUCTIVITY DURING QUARANTINE

When the pandemic started, we were stuck in our homes. Despite that we tried to make most of our time by being productive. Being productive means doing tasks which are to create something. Some of the things we did during the lockdown was to exercise, to remain fit and healthy. We learnt new things such as new cooking recipes, new languages, and new forms of art. I also tried to be productive. I used to exercise and play sports in my garden. I helped my mother in keeping the house clean. My father taught me how to fly a kite. My sister motivated me to read books. I also watered my garden everyday so that my plants could grow. Being productive in life is very important.

MY FAVORITE PET 'RABBIT'

Animals are man's best friend. I love all the animals, but rabbits are my favourite. I have two pet rabbits. Their names are Snowy and Candy. They are black and white in colour. They were given to me as a gift by my father. They have beautiful red eyes. They are very timid and full of energy. I and my brother play with them every day in my garden. I love them very much.

MY FIRST RIDE

It was a lovely evening. I was cycling. A small boy named 'Sunny' who was three years younger to me was trying to catch me while I was cycling. I made a turn to save both of us, but I crashed into a light pole. It hit me so hard that I had to start walking in pain. My sister had to pull both of our cycles alone. I was crying and felt so angry at Sunny because he laughed at me while I was crying. Later, when I asked him why he came running towards me, he replied, "I just wanted to hug you, Bhaiya".
